Voting Trend Reveals Two Counties Often Pick Presidents

But No California County Has Perfect Record for Selecting Winning Presidential Candidate

SACRAMENTO, CA – Merced and Ventura counties appear as close to bellwether counties in a presidential election as California has, according to a new analysis conducted by Secretary of State Kevin Shelley's office. The two counties have voted for the winning candidate in 22 of the past 24 presidential elections including this year's contest between President George W. Bush and US Senator John F. Kerry. The analysis revealed there were no California counties that could boast a perfect record in selecting the candidate who went on to win the presidency.

The analysis, which compared the presidential candidate receiving a majority of votes in each of California's 58 counties with the winning candidate for president, found voters in the two counties had the best track record (92 percent incidence) for selecting the US president dating back to and including the election of Woodrow Wilson in 1912.

"The counties of Ventura and Merced are the closest we have to national bellwether counties in California," said Secretary of State Kevin Shelley. "Registration for the two principal parties in these counties is evenly balanced, making them look very much like an Ohio or a Pennsylvania when it comes to voting for the president."

In contrast to those near-bellwether counties, the analysis revealed voters in Alpine County, were the least likely (58 percent incidence) to vote for the presidential candidate who won the election. In 14 of the past 24 contests for president, a majority of voters in Alpine County, the state's least populous county, voted in favor of the winning candidates on Election Day.

In another statewide analysis, voter trends revealed two coastal counties, Monterey and Santa Barbara, most often voted with the majority of California voters in selecting their choice for US president dating back to 1912. Voters in these counties had a near perfect record, voting in 23 of the past 24 presidential elections (96% incidence) for the presidential candidate who eventually garnered the most votes in California. The lone exception was in 1948, when a majority of voters in both counties voted for Thomas Dewey, while the majority of Californians voted for Harry S. Truman, who eventually won the election by five percentage points.

In contrast to these two counties, the analysis revealed Plumas County most often votes against the state trend (50 percent incidence) when selecting a presidential candidate, compared to the state's other 57 counties.
